

Economic Transition and Community Revitalization Clinton County, OH

A large group of approximately 50 people, including men and women of various ages, are posed for a group photo on a wide street in Clinton County, Ohio. They are dressed in a mix of casual and business-casual attire. The street is lined with historic, multi-story brick and stone buildings. On the right side of the street, a prominent red sign for 'MURPHY' is visible, with a marquee below it advertising a performance 'TO HONOR THE SERVICE' on 'SUN. SEPT. 11 3:00' at 'THE MURPHY THEATRE.ORG'. The sky is overcast, and the overall atmosphere is one of community and revitalization.

Economic Storm Batters Ohio Town

A Town In Crisis

The Line

When President Obama spoke of "the winter of our hardship" in his inaugural address, no one in America understood that better than the folks 60 Minutes met in Wilmington, Ohio. They're people in the grip of a brutal series of layoffs at DHL, the shipping company. Their experience was part of the news this past week that new claims for unemployment benefits are the highest in 26 years.

Since the economic crash of 2008, taxpayers have committed to more than $1 trillion in various bailouts of Wall Street. But not much of that is reaching families in crisis. On kitchen tables, headlines from Washington and New York lie beside unpaid tuition bills and foreclosure notices. After all the speeches and parties of Inauguration Day, what were the families in Wilmington asking?

"Are we going to lose our home? Are we going to be able to pay our property taxes? What are we gonna do for insurance? What are we gonna do for food? You know, and these are questions that you'd never think that we'd ask yourself. And now they're discussions in the home," says Mike O'Machearley, who is losing the job that helped support four children and a grandson.

"They always say that God closes a door, he opens another one. And we have faith that he will," he adds.

Faith is what sustains Wilmington now. Settled by Quakers 200 years ago, it's a community with such an all-American look that it seems like a movie set. About 12,000 people live there. And many, like O'Machearley, work in the last industry you'd expect in a laid back town.

In 1980, Airborne Express turned Wilmington's abandoned Air Force base into a hub for overnight shipping. Eight thousand people found work at what they call "the air park." Then, in 2003 a German company, DHL, bought Airborne in an effort to win a big piece of the U.S. market. It didn't work. The merger was rocky, there were service disruptions, and customers left in droves. With last fall's economic crash, DHL was losing $6 million a day in the U.S.; layoffs started coming by the hundreds.

People who worked there for decades found themselves in DHL-sponsored meetings learning about unemployment.

Local Response

A black plastic bucket is placed against a brick wall. A red garden hose nozzle is inserted into the top of the bucket, with water spraying into it. Several holes are drilled into the side of the bucket, and water is leaking out from each. A large blue curved arrow points from the top left towards the bucket, and another large blue curved arrow points from the bottom right away from the bucket. The text 'WEALTH FLOWING IN' is written in white capital letters next to the top arrow, and 'WEALTH FLOWING OUT' is written in white capital letters next to the bottom arrow.

Clinton County's Buy Local promotions, like the holiday campaign promoting local merchants, appear to provide sales lifts for participants versus non-participants in same categories

Observations

- In comparing Clinton County customer sales pre versus post campaign periods, the participating merchants (2009-2011) appear to generate a net incremental sales lift and residual lifts versus non-participating merchants in the same categories for the campaign and post-campaign periods.
- For participating merchants, there also appears to be a lift in their general response rates (number of tickets) and sales above the $25 minimum entry point which does comprise a sizable proportion of their sales.

Participating Merchants Campaign Period	2009	2010	2011
% Tickets > $25	50%	40%	41%
% Sales $ > $25	72%	49%	60%
Change From Prior 3 Months
% Tickets > $25	0%	6%	8%
% Sales $ > $25	1%	-2%	9%

Notes:

* See appendix for list of participating merchants in 2009-2011..

 Response identified when card purchase > $25 at participating merchant during period.
